How to Create the Building Blocks Shape Matching Game: Collect blocks in a range of sizes and colors, and markers or pens that match each block⎕s color. Place each block the same piece of paper. Trace each block with the coordinating color market. Place the blocks in a group and mix them up. Challenge your child to play by matching the blocks to the outline of corresponding shape and color on the paper.

Physicists have identified 12 building blocks that are the fundamental constituents of matter. Our everyday world is made of just three of these building blocks: the up quark, the down quark and the electron. This set of particles is all that's needed to make protons and neutrons and to form atoms and molecules.

Currently there are three kinds of building blocks: quarks, leptons and bosons. Read about Fermilab's search for the bottom and top quarks, the accelerator and detectors needed for their discovery, the spin-offs along the way, and the continuing efforts to reveal the basic particles and forces of nature. Searching for the Building Blocks of Matter was an exhibit for the public on the 15th floor of Wilson Hall at Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory.
