Song of the Water Boatman & Other Pond Poems. Here hang the algae, green and small, in the depths of the summer pond. Here floats the flea, waving antennae, that eats the algae, green and small, in the depths of the summer pond. From spring's first thaw to autumn's chill, the world of the pond is teeming with life, and full of surprises.

Water boatmen are common and widespread throughout Britain - you'll find them in most weedy ponds, lakes and slow-flowing rivers. They spend most of their time at the bottom, coming to the surface only to renew their air supply. Males attract females with a 'courtship song', produce by rubbing their front legs against a ridge on their head.
